

MENTOR NEWSCAST

Three students were seen fighting in the gym at School for Global Studies today, over who would be chosen as the center during a class basketball game. The game was an opportunity for Global's star players to shine in the gym. That's not what happened though. Instead, there was pandemonium.

The students were girls from class 801, and each was a star player. Sharon was the tallest. Rachel was the fastest. Ruby was the fiercest. Each wanted that center spot. There's more than one forward in basketball, there's more than one guard, but there's only one center. To be center is to be the megastar.

Witnesses at the event saw it go from bad to worse. First the girls talked about it. Then they jumped for it. Then they shoved for it. Then suddenly there were girls like puppies rolling on the floor trying to get the ball. Bystanders were kicked, the circle of girls around the players yelped. Then Coach Abrams' long arms reached for the back of the girls' jerseys. Abrams' decision was quick as she threw the girls out of the game. None of the three would play center today. Those stars had just imploded.
